African Centre for the Constructive Resolution of Disputes (ACCORD)

ACCORD was established in 1992 as an Educational Trust and associated with South Africa’s five historically black universities: Western Cape, Fort Hare, Transkei, The North and Durban-Westville. The primary objective for the establishment of ACCORD was to provide a mechanism to deal with conflict arising out of South Africa’s transition from apartheid to democratic governance. There was an urgent need for people to be better informed about the negotiation process and to be trained in negotiation strategies in order to engage in negotiations at local levels and to popularize negotiation as a way to deal with disputes.

Centre for the Study of Violence and Reconciliation

The Centre for the Study of Violence and Reconciliation (CSVr) is a multi-disciplinary South African non-governmental organization. Since its inception in 1989, the CSVr has been dedicated to making a meaningful contribution to peaceful and fundamental transformation in South Africa and in the Southern African region.

CSVr welcomes applications from people wishing to do an internship from South Africa and the rest of the world. Due to having been inundated with requests for internship, however, and in order to handle the process effectively, we have decided to review all applications on 15 March and 15 October each year:

Truth and Reconciliation

In a move toward uncovering past events without further polarizing the society, the government of South Africa created the Truth and Reconciliation Commission on April 15, 1996, presided by Archbishop Desmond Tutu. The purpose of the commission is to collect and investigate victims' accounts from the period of 1960 through 1994, to consider amnesty for those who confess their participation in atrocities, and to make recommendations for reparations. The commission was established in the hope that it would foster healing and prevent such crimes from happening again.

Religious Organizing Against the Death Penalty Project

Religious Organizing Against the Death Penalty Project seeks to build a powerful coalition of faith-based activists. Nationally, it works with official religious bodies to develop strategies and to promote anti-death penalty activism within each faith tradition. At the grassroots level, the project links with individuals and faith communities, establishing “covenant” relationships to foster local abolition efforts.

Resource Center for Non-Violence

The Resource Center for Non-Violence is a twenty-five year old peace and social justice organization dedicated to promoting the principles of nonviolent social change and enhancing the quality of life and human dignity. It offers a wide-range of educational programs in the history, theory, methodology and current practice of nonviolence as a force for personal and social change. The Resource Center has an international focus, with interns coming from Bosnia, Herzegovnia, as well as from California. Our programs focus on places as far as the Middle East and as near as Southern Mexico and our own neighborhood.

The Resource Center for Nonviolence in Santa Cruz, California, offers an Internship Program in which persons interested in learning more about nonviolent community organizing come and join in the work of the Center's staff and supporters. Interns take advantage of college field-study or extramural education programs, vacation times, or other transitional periods in their lives to come and live in Santa Cruz, participate in the day-to-day activity of the Resource Center, plan and help direct community service programs with the staff, pursue their own studies in the Center's extensive library of literature on Nonviolence, as well as participating in the Center's wide variety of public education events. When possible, they are also provided with low-cost communal housing at the Center.

Society of Professionals in Dispute Resolution

Society of Professionals in Dispute Resolution (SPIDR) was organized in 1972, growing out of the labor-management mediation and arbitration movement. SPIDR performs three primary functions. It guards the standards and ethics of the field of dispute resolution and collaborative decision-making. It seeks to develop the intellectual and professional roots of the field to educate the public about various dispute resolution procedures that were available in order to clarify the expanding role of the conflict resolver; and it supports its members and provides them with tangible and intangible membership benefits.

Journey of Healing

The Journey of Healing is a program focused on bringing home the stolen generations of Aboriginal Australians, offering every local community the chance to come together across the racial divides, listen to each other's experiences and plan for healing. It has organized study circles and daylong seminars throughout the country, bringing together members of the Aboriginal community in each locality with police, civic officials and others. This steady work, through ten years, has done much to create a greater awareness of Aboriginal perceptions among the wider community.

In the early 1990s the Federal Government became alarmed at the rate at which Aboriginal people were committing suicide in prison. They established a Royal Commission which investigated 100 Aboriginal people who had died in prison and have discovered that 43 of them had been removed from their families as children, as a result of the separation and juvenile justice policies of the time.

Initiative on Conflict Resolution and Ethnicity

InCoRE is a program was established in 1993 by the University of Ulster in conjunction with the United Nations University in order to perform research and policy work on ethnic conflict resolution, as well as finding strategies for solving political and religious conflicts. Currently, InCoRE's research focuses on post-conflict issues, issues of diversity governance and research methodology in violent societies. InCoRE also produces a web based Conflict Data Service which provides current and historical information on all major on-going conflicts, theme sites on a variety of issues relevant to conflict and information on conflict resolution institutions throughout the world.

*INCORE Summer School 2001 is offering three courses: The Challenges and Contradictions of Development and Conflict, Psychological Approaches to Conflict Resolution and Post-Conflict Situations Dealing with the Past. Two leading practitioners or academics in the field, one international and one local to Northern Ireland, will facilitate each course. The courses will review existing knowledge, examine current issues and challenges and analyze relevant case studies. The courses are most suited for individuals who have been working for national or international aid agencies, governments or Non-Government Organizations in the field of conflict management as well as for those people with a related background looking to gain insights into this new area. Conducted at INCOREs offices in Derry/Londonderry, Northern Ireland, the courses will run from June 10-15, 2001. Application Deadline: March 30, 2001. ## Reconciliation Walk Reconciliation Walk is dedicated to overcoming the bitter legacies of the past by fostering friendship and mutual understanding across civilizations. From 1996 to 1999, over 2,500 Western Christians from over 25 different nations came to visit the Middle East carrying a message of forgiveness for the Crusades of 900 years ago. The Reconciliation Walk hopes to continue fostering understanding and friendship between East and West by continuing to undo the bitter legacies of the past. After 31/2 years of groups traveling in the region, the RW saw how stereotypes are broken when people meet face to face.

Redress

REDRESS is a London based, internationally focused, non-profit legal / human rights organization. Founded on Human Rights Day 10th December 1992, REDRESS helps torture survivors use available legal remedies to obtain reparation and to campaign for effective remedies where they do not exist. Reparation (including compensation and rehabilitation) plays an important part in healing and restoring the lives of those who have been tortured. Seeking legal redress also helps to combat the practice of torture and deter repressive regimes.

* Special Support Program for Peace and Reconciliation

Special Support Program for Peace and Reconciliation was established by the Department of Finance of Ireland in order to reinforce progress towards a peaceful and more stable society and to promote reconciliation by increasing economic development and employment, promoting urban and rural regeneration, developing cross-border cooperation and extending social inclusion. SSPPR promotes the social inclusion of those who are at the margins of social and economic life; it exploits new opportunities and addresses the needs arising from the peace process in order to boost economic growth and advance social and economic regeneration.

War Resisters' International

War Resister's International is extensive network that brings together peace researchers and nonviolence trainers from over 40 countries, participating through national Sections and Associate organizations, ranging from Gandhian teachers in India to anti-war campaigners in former Yugoslavia. While many WRI members take an activist role in campaigns, others may carry out their war resistance in quieter ways in the decisions they make in their daily lives.

World Council of Churches

The World Council of Churches (WCC) is an international fellowship of Christian churches, built upon the foundation of encounter, dialogue and collaboration. The WCC was formed to serve and advance the ecumenical movement - the quest for restoring the unity of the church - by encouraging in its members a common commitment to follow the gospel. WCC's mission is to pray for and pursue the visible unity of Christ's church – “in one faith and in one eucharistic fellowship, expressed in worship and common life in Christ, through witness and service to the world.”

Middle East

Americans and Palestinians for Peace

AMPAL is a national not-for-profit organization working for peace in the Middle East. AMPAL (Americans and Palestinians for Peace) was created to fill the need of informing the American public about the Palestinian dream of self-determination. Relying on facts and statistics concerning the Peace Process, AMPAL is the counter balance of what is shown in the media or the propaganda that most individuals receive their information from.
